WHEN DO YOU LIKE YOUR HERSHEY'S CHOCOLATE MILK?

Leigh Slonaker

Age: 11

"First thing when I get up. I'm on the swim team and practice starts early. Hershey's Syrup... 3 squeezes and a glass of skim milk and I'm outta here."

Jonathan Cooper

Age: 8

"After school with a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. Just before I go out and skateboard and hang with my friends. Energy plus."

Gregory Grant

Age: 7

"Okay, I'll admit it. Right before I go to bed I need my Hershey's chocolate milk. And no, I don't sleep with a security blanket."

A TOP SECRET

conversation between Secret Service agents at the DISNEY ADVENTURES offices:

Special Agent Lynton: JAWS and POLAR BEAR are by the coffeemaker.

Special Agent Skipper: MISS INNOCENT is engaged in conversation with one male delivery person.

Lynton: ENCYCLOPEDIA and FACE-OFF are online, maintaining chat status. Is backup required?

Skipper: That's a negative. ENDZONE and BOOKWORM now leaving building. Destination: workout facility.

Lynton: Roger. I copy on that. I hear PUDDIN' CUP. Exact location unknown. She's yelling for SKYHIGH.

Skipper: EASTWOOD on way to grocery store. She has coupons on her person. I repeat. She has double coupons!

Lynton: I'll alert the store. PUPPY is in the POUND.

Door is closed. Confidence is high. DRAWING BOARD in same area.

Skipper: Roger. TOONTOWN waiting outside the POUND.

Lynton: FINGERS and BLUELINE ordering lunch.

Chinese again.

Skipper: That's a Ten-Four. SNAKE EYES also in lunch mode.

Lynton: CATNIP and SCRIBE engaged in phone conversation.

Skipper: The lid is on. Over and out.

To decode this Secret Service conversation, see the list of staff members below. (Here's a hint: The Pound is Tommi's Office.)

NEWSBITS

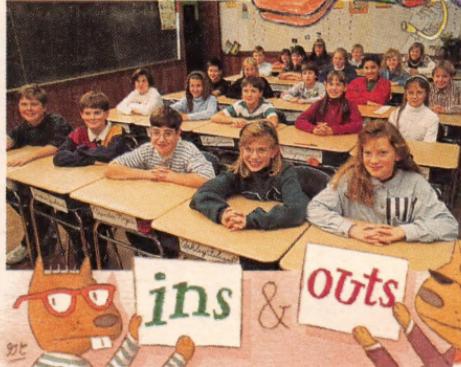

Get ready: Cable experts say that in the near future you'll be able to play any video game you want, any time of day, without having to rent or buy the cartridge. The Sega Channel—a cable network—will pipe video games right into your television. Now that's what we call a game show!

Top cap: No need to turn your cap backward or sideways, especially with the newest baseball caps. They have no brim. Worn by thrashers everywhere.

Some schools use cassette tapes of hip-hop music called Rapnotes to help teach biology and chemistry. Rappers turn real lesson plans into a jam. The songs have titles like "Cells—Part 1" and "Respiration."

No skateboarder would be caught boarding fakie without the right shoes. These are Airwalks and they were everywhere.

little league big guy

D.A. Follow-Up:
Since we last hung out in the dugout with Little League pitcher Sean Burroughs (May 1993 issue), he's had an MVP year.

When D.A. talked to pitcher Sean Burroughs last year, he and the rest of his Long Beach, California, tournament team had been awarded the 1992 World Series Championship—but only after the Philippines team was disqualified. Sure, Sean was stoked that his team was number 1. But as every athlete knows, unless you win your title on the field, some people think you're not really the best. This year, Sean and his teammates know they're the real deal. At the 1993 Little League World Series in August, they beat Panama 3-2 in the final to clinch the title. Sean, now 13, threw two no-hitters, pitched two games in which he struck out 16 players, and hit three homers. He was in newspapers across the country, appeared on TV talk shows, and signed tons of autographs. D.A. caught up to him for this update:

The Real Deal Win: Our goal was to win on the field. Last year I was playing soccer by the time we got the championship flag.

On the Major Stats: I'm surprised at how well I did. I was in a slump at the Series last year.

But He Didn't

Throw Up: I'm a little nervous before any big game. But once it starts, I really get into it.

So Who's Your Hero?

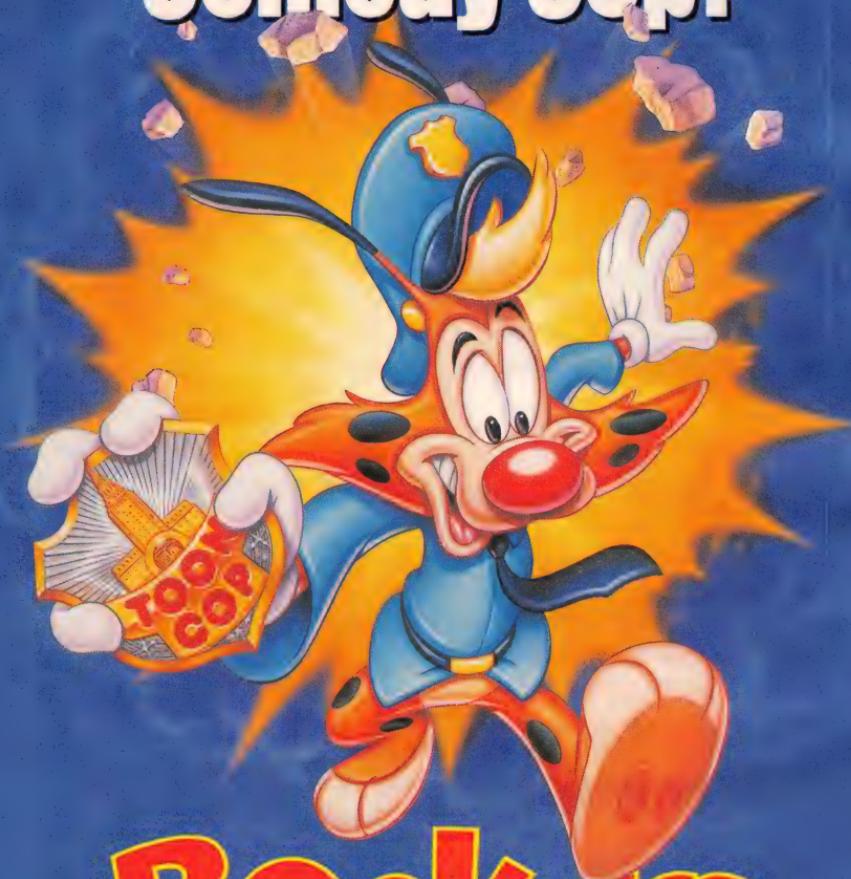

My Dad was a major-league baseball player—he even won an MVP award. He teaches fundamentals: how to hold the bat or grip the ball. He also tells me not to be a show-off.

Branching Out: I might like to play in the majors when I'm older. But actually I'd rather play shortstop because then you get to play every day!

Luke Perry climbs onto a big ol' bucking bull in a new movie, 8 Seconds. Luke plays Lane Frost, the legendary real-life rodeo champion. Wonder if Luke will call Garth Brooks for fashion tips....

Kid 'N Play are in the house—again! In House Party 3, the hip-hoppers get some competition from those little rappers with the totally funky hats, Immature. Could be the party to end all parties!...

Immature is in the house—House Party 3, that is.

Shaq shoots, Shaq scores, Shaq raps! Now he acts in his first movie, Blue Chips. He plays—surprise, surprise—a basketball player! Memphis State star Anfernee "Penny" Hardaway is also in the movie. Good thing they got along, cuz Penny is now Shaq's Orlando Magic teammate!

Austin

D.A. got invited to lunch on the set of My Girl 2 with Anna Chlumsky, 13, and Austin O'Brien, 12. We were really hungry, so we said, "Yeah!" Austin, the kid from Last Action Hero, got there first and grabbed some tuna sandwiches. D.A. spilled some soda and Austin dropped a fork; we all laughed and promised not to tell anyone. Finally, in between bites, we dished....

D.A.: Since Anna's not here yet, tell us: Does she do anything to annoy you?

Austin: She likes to beat me up a lot. I can't fight back. I'll get my butt kicked!

D.A.: Who's your best friend?

Austin: I'm best friends with a lot of people. Like, Arnold Schwarzenegger. He wants to adopt me, actually.

D.A.: Do you get noticed now that you've been in a movie with Arnold?

Austin: One time I walked into a store, and this guy came up to me and said, "You look like that kid in the movie." And I just went, "Cool!"

Then Anna (remember My Girl?) showed up, and the real fun began. See, Anna and Austin are total opposites. But they get along. Sort of....

D.A.: Do you guys like the '70s clothes you wear in this movie?

Anna: I think they're cool! The crocheted vests, the bell bottoms.... They're really neat!

Austin: I wear these bell bottoms...and nothing matches! And my hair is feathered—I have these wings! It just drives me nuts!

D.A.: Speaking of nuts, any favorite foods?

Anna: Asian food. My dad is a chef, so I get to taste a lot of different stuff.

Austin: Watermelon. Just the other day, Ted from the movie's food department and I had a watermelon fight. I can't believe I was throwing it instead of eating it!

D.A.: Anna, Austin says he hangs out with Arnold. Do you hang with any stars?

Anna: I hung out with Elijah Wood at a July 4th party. He's cool. Nicole Kidman and Tom Cruise were there, too.

D.A.: Tom Cruise—wow, did you get starstruck?

Anna: I tried to maintain. If I met one of the Beatles, I'd go nuts!

D.A.: Does Austin bother you at all?

Anna: I think I bug him more than he bugs me. I beat him up... when I'm in a good mood.

D.A.'s crazy, crazi, crazé about Tony Toni Toné. These three guys, also known as D'wayne, Raphael and Timothy, sing some of the slap-jacking'est grooves we've ever heard.

D.A.'s top choices: "Anniversary," the 3T's nine-minute slow-groovin' song; and last year's hit, "If I Had No Loot," which gives attitude to those pals who only hang when things are fine. Word to those fair-weather friends: C-Ya!...

Members of the Red Hot Chili Peppers, X, Toad the Wet Sprocket, The Beastie Boys, Dada and The Posies perform songs and character voices on the album. But the star is Meeps. He's an imaginary creature who lives in the rain forest and has adventures. Bet this Meeps won't give you the creeps!

Dean of Steel

He plays Superman in "Lois & Clark: The New Adventures of Superman," but Dean Cain was once a real-life football superhero. As a Princeton college player, Dean set an NCAA record for interceptions. The Buffalo Bills nabbed him for the pros. Then the Kryptonite hit. Three days before his first pre-season game Dean hurt his knee and had to retire. Super harsh!

Fortunately, Dean had a backup plan: acting. Little did he know flying would become part of it.

Q: So what did you do to become Superman?

A: Audition, audition, audition. The producers thought I was too young, at first, but they changed their minds.

Q: Did you read Superman when you were a kid?

A: No, I wasn't a big comic book reader. I saw the Superman movies starring Christopher Reeve. He was a great Superman.

Q: What's it like working in tights?

A: [big laugh] It's very embarrassing. I wouldn't want to do it forever. You have to be so conscious of whether your gut is sagging, whether you're in good shape or not.

Q: Did you think about that when you got the role?

A: Yes! The first time I put on the suit, it was like, "Wow...this is the suit. I am in the suit...." Even now, it's a lot harder to play Superman than it is to play Clark Kent, because Clark is a real person.

Q: What books did you read as a kid?

A: I read The Chronicles of Narnia, by C.S. Lewis. I was an avid reader. I loved books.

Q: Were you into sports?

A: I was way into sports. A lot of football players were my heroes. [Olympic decathlon Gold Medalist] Bruce Jenner was a big hero.

Q: So which is tougher, acting or football?

A: Physically, football is tougher. Mentally, acting is probably tougher.

Q: We hear you spend a lot of time "hanging" on the set.

A: [laughs] I spend a lot of time hanging from wires for flying scenes. The athletic stuff in this role is fun. I run, jump, pick people up. If you weren't an athlete, it would be an awful role to play.

Q: Would you want to be able to fly in real life?

A: I don't like to be real high in the air. I feel like I'll fall all the time!

Q: What do you do in the little spare time you have?

A: I hang out, relax, write, play a lot of sports. The Dallas Cowboys are my favorite football team to watch. I like video games, Nintendo and Sega Genesis. I ride my dirt bike and my Harley-Davidson. I play beach volleyball and basketball. Oh, and I surf....

Q: Wow, it sounds like you never slow down!

A: It's true! It's kind of frightening!

Q: What would you do if you did slow down?

A: Go to sleep.

—Heidi MacDonald

Krypto-Trivia

So, you think you know all about The Man of Steel?! Well, the super-dude's been sprinting around Metropolis for more than 55 years. There's gotta be something you missed! Take this test on your super-knowledge.

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Before Clark Kent worked for The Daily Planet, he was a mild-mannered reporter for The Daily Star.
 2. Redheaded Lex Luthor Jr. is the son of the bald one himself, Superman's archenemy Lex Luthor.
 3. When Superman was a kid he had a super-mutt named Krypto.

4. Superman's one and only love is Lois Lane.

Superman (George Reeves) wraps up another case with Lois Lane and Jimmy Olsen on the 1950s TV show.

Superman
(Christopher Reeve) nabs
Lex Luther (Gene Hackman).

worked at the Daily Star. His first editor was George Taylour, not Perry White. Guess The Daily Star just didn't pay enough for all that super-suit dry cleaning.

2. FALSE: Lex and Lex Jr. are actually the same person. Lex be his own son. So what did they do on Father's Day?

3. TRUE: Superman's Kryptonian dad, Jor-El, launched the Cannon of Steel into space to test the rocket that would bring baby Earth. He wasn't the last superhero, though. DC Comics once actually created a TV show called "Superpup", with human actors wearing large dog heads. What happened to the show? It went to college, Superman fell for a Clark's girlfriend was Lana Lang. In fact, he lost his memory and fell in love with Sally Selway.

4. FALSE: As a boy in Smallville, the dogsi mermaid from Atlas named Lori Lemaris. (It could happen!) And Clark's girlfriend was Lana Lang. In once, he lost his memory and fell in love with Sally Selway.

Secret White House Tour

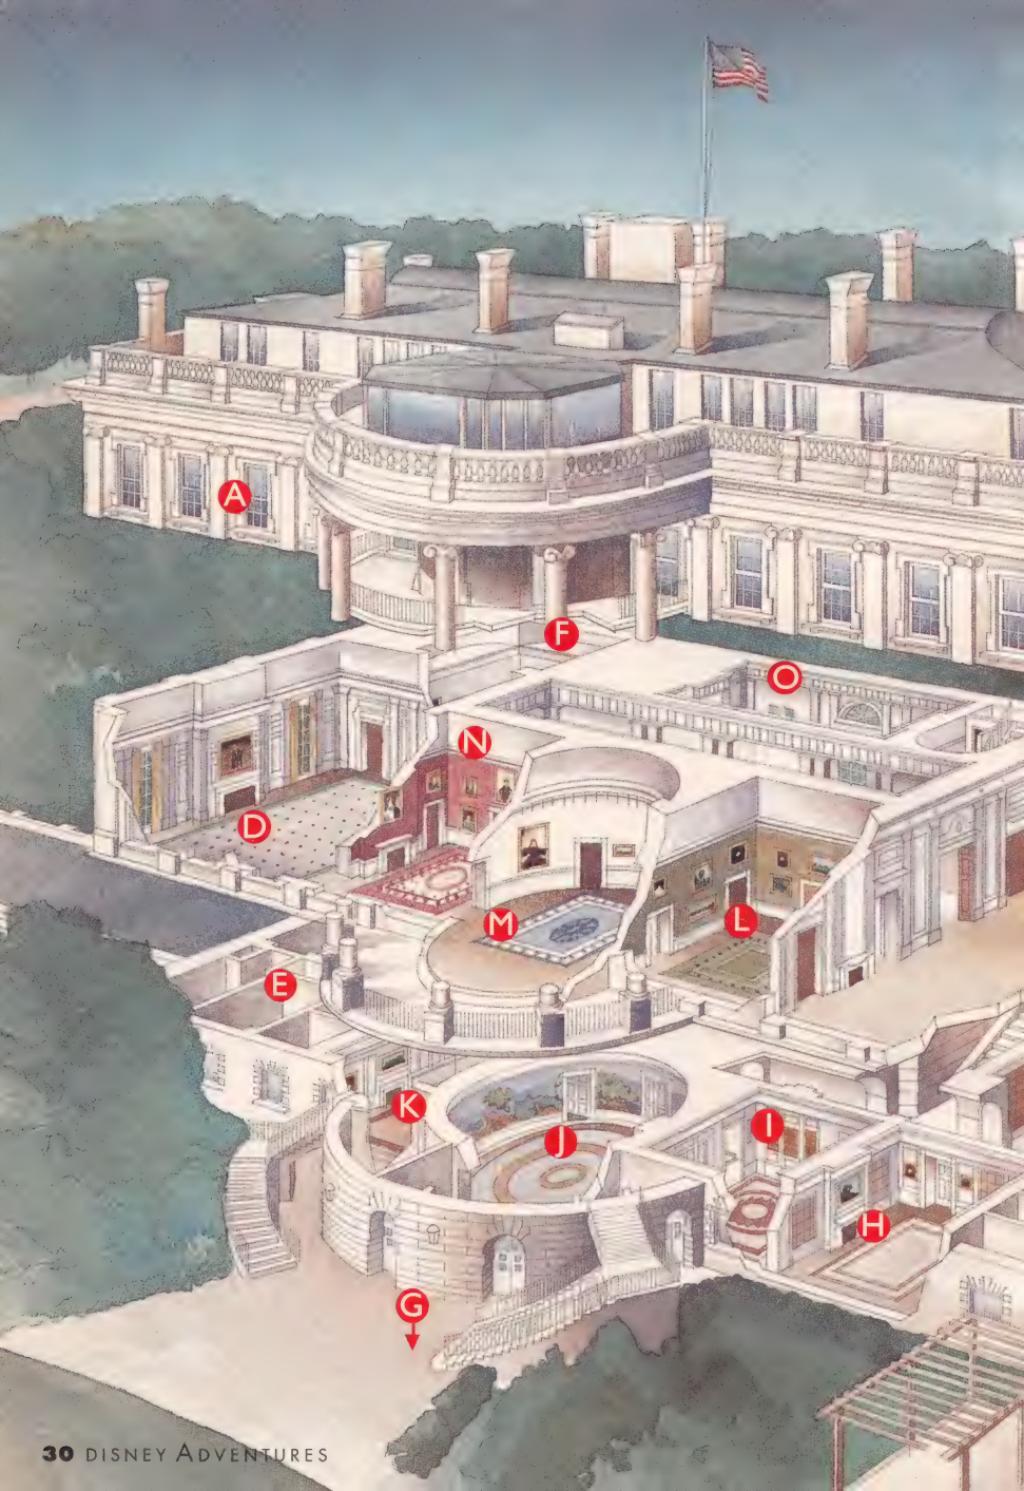

WRITTEN BY

The Tour Begins Here

Take the regular White House tour and you'll see five rooms and some nice furniture. Take D.A.'s Secret White House Tour and you'll go behind the scenes where the First Family hangs out.

A First Family's Living Quarters The First Family has a house within the White House—18 bedrooms, 20 bathrooms, 29 fireplaces, a dining room and a small kitchen (so they don't have to run downstairs to the main kitchen for a snack). They can decorate any way they want. And when they run out of milk or need to return a video, butlers are on call to do the job.

B East Room Abigail Adams (wife of second President John Adams) did her laundry here in 1801. Nowadays the President uses the East Room for TV press conferences and entertaining guests after big state dinners.

C Library Former President Jimmy Carter's daughter Amy hit the books here. Chelsea Clinton likes to do her geography in the Presidential Study next door to the Oval Office—where dad's hard at work on economics.

D State Dining Room Big dinner parties—we're talking 140 people—are held in the State Dining Room.

Then-President Gerald Ford's daughter Susan held her high school prom in the East Room in 1975.

E Gym If the prez is a fitness buff, he can get in a quick workout between Cabinet meetings and press conferences here.

Just be glad it's not your turn to do the dishes after a big state dinner!

F Kitchen Chefs and cooks whip up the First Family's meals—not to mention cooking for official dinners, receptions, luncheons, teas and conferences.

G Basement Housemaids and housemen keep the White House spotless. In addition to regular cleaning, they polish each piece of antique furniture daily. (And there are 3,303 pieces of furniture in the White House!) The executive housekeeper inspects their work, fluffs unfluffed pillows and makes sure chairs are in exactly the right spots.

President John F. Kennedy's son John-John used to sit under the desk while his dad worked. John-John called this space his "house."

Doctor's Office When the President gets sick, his doctor doesn't make house calls—his clinic is right in the White House.

H Vermeil Room President Harry Truman shot some pool here in the 1950s. The pool table's gone, and now the room is stocked with gold and silver trays. We like

The White House Office of Correspondence It takes 130 employees and 450 volunteers to handle the 12,000 to 20,000 letters delivered to the White House every day.

The White House Switchboard If you dial (202) 456-1414, your call be answered by one of 20 telephone operators who work eight-hour shifts around the clock. They receive about 50,000 calls a day—30,000 of which are for the President. They never accept collect calls.

Oval Office The President does most of his paperwork in the Oval Office.

The White House Grounds

A flock of "lawn-mowing" sheep grazed on the South Lawn during Woodrow Wilson's administration.

Eighteen acres of green lawns and gardens surround the White House.

1 John

Kennedy practiced his golf swing and George Bush threw horseshoes on the South Lawn.

2 Fifteen presidential kids and grandkids left their hand prints in the flagstone path of the Children's Garden.

3 The President can make a quick getaway from the helicopter pad—sometimes for a vacation at Camp David in the Maryland mountains.

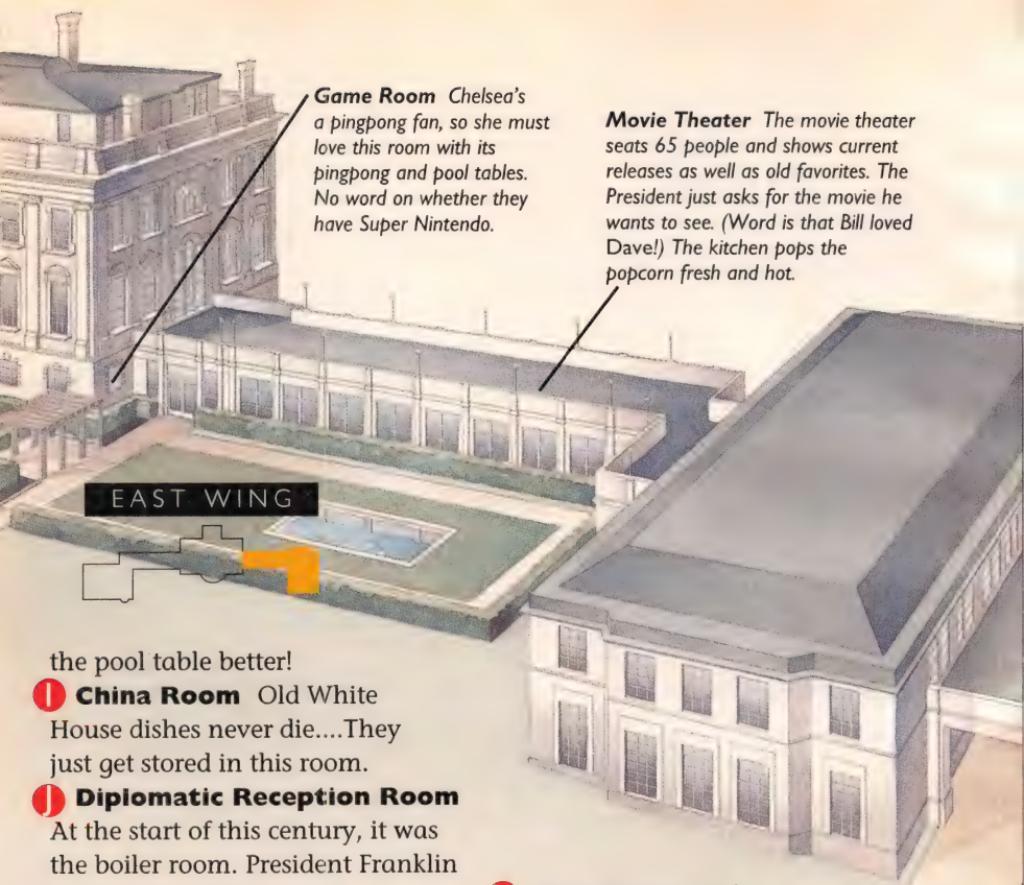

4 The heated swimming pool has a 10-foot diving board—perfect for cannon balls. An underground tunnel leads from the White House basement to the pool.

5 Teddy Roosevelt and (much later) George Bush chased balls all over the tennis court. It's hidden by tall trees and shrubs so people on the outside can't see.

WEST WING

the pool table better!

I China Room Old White House dishes never die....They just get stored in this room.

J Diplomatic Reception Room At the start of this century, it was the boiler room. President Franklin D. Roosevelt kept it warm, broadcasting his "fireside radio chats" from here in the 1940s.

K Map Room During World War II, Roosevelt followed the fight from here. He mapped out where all U.S. forces were at all times—including the destroyer his son was on.

L Green Room Thomas Jefferson liked to throw casual dinner parties here for his best buds.

Franklin Roosevelt's grandchildren start a snowball fight.

Game Room Chelsea's a pingpong fan, so she must love this room with its pingpong and pool tables. No word on whether they have Super Nintendo.

Movie Theater The movie theater seats 65 people and shows current releases as well as old favorites. The President just asks for the movie he wants to see. (Word is that Bill loved Dave!) The kitchen pops the popcorn fresh and hot.

M Blue Room Only one President's been married in the White House—Grover Cleveland in 1886. The small wedding was held here.

N Red Room Dolley Madison first did it up in red in 1809. The latest shade is called "Nancy Reagan Red."

O Entrance Hall Step inside the White House and one of three doormen will greet you. They also operate the Presidential Elevator and deliver mail and messages in the White House.

Phantoms of the White House

Scary things are wandering through the White House. No, not members of Congress. We're talking about the spirits who supposedly share living space with the President's family.

For years, people in the White House have claimed to see ghosts. William Taft's servants reported seeing the spirit of a blonde, blue-eyed boy. No one could figure out who he was, but some people said they felt a "slight pressure on the shoulder," as though the boy were trying to get their attention.

In 1945, President Harry Truman wrote a letter to his wife about an early morning encounter: "At 4 o'clock I was awakened by three distinct knocks on my bedroom door. I jumped up and put on my bathrobe, opened the door, and no one was there....[This] place is haunted shure as shootin'."

But the most mysterious guy in the White House is Abraham Lincoln. Winston Churchill, former prime minister of England, saw him.

Dutch Queen Wilhelmina fainted

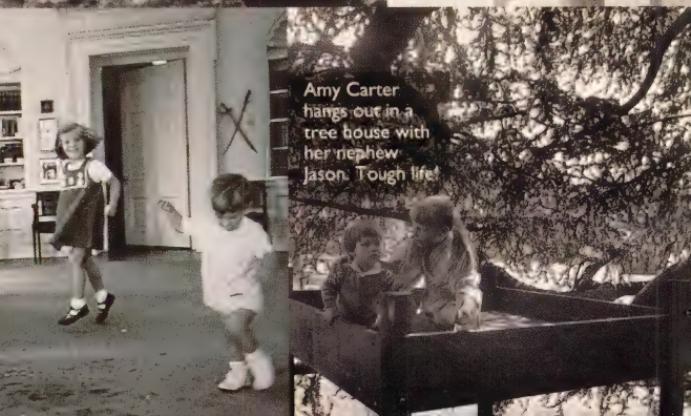

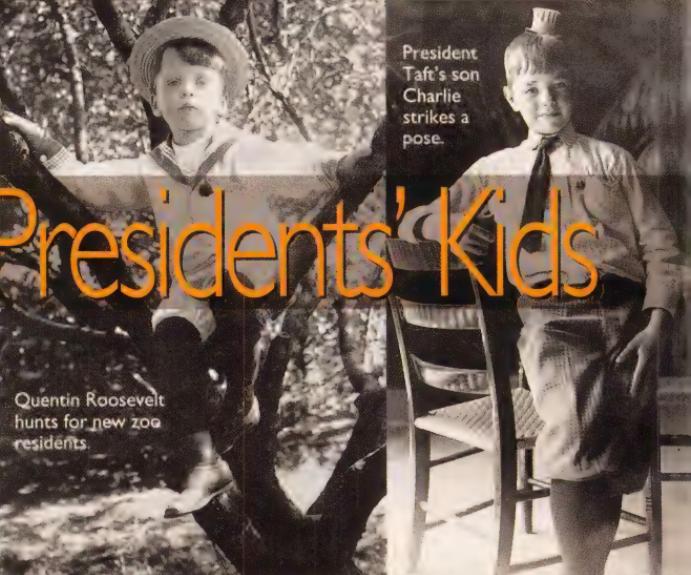

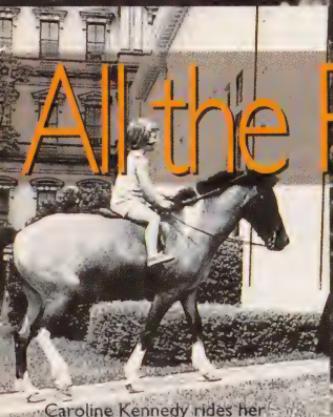

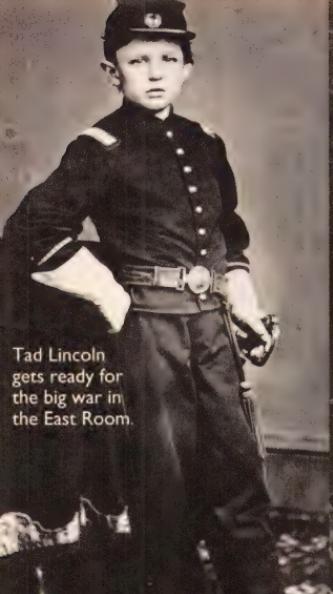

when she spotted his ghost; Lady Bird Johnson, wife of President Lyndon Johnson, said she felt his spirit in her bedroom. (But apparently Lincoln only shows up when he wants to. Amy Carter and her friends tried to contact him with a Ouija board, but nothing happened.)

Ronald Reagan's daughter Maureen used to sleep in the Lincoln Bedroom. Some nights she saw a reddish glow she swore was Lincoln's ghost. People laughed, but Maureen had one true believer—Rex, the family dog. Rex used to bark at the door of the Lincoln Bedroom.

But he would never, ever go inside.

Does Honest Abe still visit the Lincoln Bedroom?

Don't let this peaceful photo fool you! The Roosevelt kids are only resting between pranks.

Quentin Roosevelt hunts for new zoo residents.

Caroline and John Jr. give their father, President Kennedy, the ol' song and dance routine.

President Taft's son Charlie strikes a pose.

ne lucky kid lives at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue today. But dozens of children have called the White House home. And some First Kids were major menaces.

Abraham Lincoln's sons, Willie and Tad, loved to dress up in Civil War uniforms and play army. Tad once even bombed the Cabinet Room door with his toy cannon! Another time, Tad and Willie crossed a few wires in the bell system. Then they laughed while their father's aides ran around answering phantom "calls."

James Garfield's sons swam in the fountain and rode their bikes through the White House halls. William Taft's children loved to slide down the main stairway on tin trays.

Then there was Benjamin McKee, Benjamin Harrison's grandson. "Baby McKee" had a pet billy goat that pulled him in a wagon. One day the goat dragged Baby McKee into the street; a huffing, puffing President Harrison chased them down Pennsylvania Avenue.

But the wildest kids to live in the White House were Theodore Roosevelt's family. Picture Kevin McCallister in the Home Alone movies—times six! Teddy's gang walked through the flower beds on stilts. They roller-skated in the East Room. They had water fights in the halls. One night they threw spitballs at a portrait of Andrew Jackson; their dad got them out of bed to scrape it clean.

"The White House Gang" (as the kids called themselves) had a zoo that included a kangaroo rat and a black bear. Quentin, the youngest "zookeeper," once dropped a snake on his dad's desk during a meeting. Another time, when brother Archie had the measles, Quentin hustled their pony onto the elevator and up to Archie's second-floor bedroom.

Of course, not all First Kids trash the White House. President Carter's daughter Amy once had a really tough homework assignment about the Industrial Revolution. Her mother asked an aide for help. Two days later, a truck delivered boxes of computer printouts on the Industrial Revolution. The staff thought the request came from the President and spent the whole weekend working on it!

And what about Chelsea Clinton? Well, the current First Kid has lived in the White House for just over a year. She and her cat Socks have been keeping pretty quiet—so far.

Secret Service Saves

White House security makes James Bond movies look like kid stuff. The Secret Service arrests about 300 "unwelcome visitors" each year—like the tourist who decided to sneak into the White House.

Fifteen minutes later, he was arrested and spent six days in jail.

Here are a few other ways the Secret Service keeps the First Family safe from terrorists—or tourists.

- An 8-foot-tall iron fence surrounds the White House. Flower planters are actually

The Secret Service used to tell the press that the President had gone to bed by saying, "The lid is on." That's just one of the code names and phrases the Secret Service uses for the President, the Vice-President and their families. See if you can guess who or what gets which code name below:

5,000-pound concrete barriers that can stop a 9-ton car going 30 mph.

- The White House lawn is planted with special pressure sensors that trigger an alarm when someone steps on them.
- Every car entering the White House grounds is "sniffed out" by a dog trained to find explosives.
- White House security keeps ground-to-air missiles hidden close by. If a plane invades the White House air space, security has less than a minute to decide if they should fire.
- A law forbids building anything over 4 feet tall in the park across the street from the White House. One winter, two guys built a 7-foot-tall igloo there. They were arrested and the igloo was torn down. The Secret Service thought it was big enough to hide a missile launcher.
- Security measures don't stop at the gate. Threatening phone calls and suspicious packages are directed to the Secret Service.
- Even Chelsea has to put up with bodyguards. Secret Service agents sit through all her classes.

Taste Test

You'd

think the President

could eat whatever he wants.

Not so—just ask Bill Clinton!

A few months ago, Bill got a hankering for pizza. So he called a pizza joint and ordered a pie. But before he could take a bite, a Secret Service man grabbed Bill's pizza! The pizza place hadn't been "secured," or checked out by Special Agents.

Although the Clintons pay for their own food, the Secret Service picks it up at specially "cleared" stores, where only a few people are allowed to handle the groceries. Then White House chefs whip up the First Family's favorites. Can you match each plate below with the Clinton (Bill, Hillary or Chelsea) who likes that food the best?

Fried chicken, broccoli with cheese and chocolate cake

Chicken enchiladas and sweet potato casserole

Fish and pickles (but not together!)

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

Dear DISNEY ADVENTURES Friends:

I was so surprised to hear about the letters you sent for me through DISNEY ADVENTURES and was impressed by the informed questions and comments these letters contained. I'm proud to know that so many young people take an active interest in the way our country is governed and the type of world that they will inherit. This is one of the reasons I ran for President—to ensure that the world we leave you is strong, secure and healthy.

Let me go back to the day I became President of the United States. It was January 20th of last year and I gave the Inaugural Speech on the steps of the United States Capitol. I said then, and still very strongly believe, that our country has the resources and the spirit to solve all our problems; but we must work together to make that happen.

Some of you wrote to me about health care. Believe me, I know we must find a way to lower the cost of the current health care system. I have sent the Health Care Security Act to the Congress. Under my plan, every American will be issued a Health Security card that guarantees them access to good, affordable health care from the doctor of their choice.

We must also make it easier for your generation to go to college. On September 21, 1993, I signed into law the National Service Bill. This will enable 100,000 young Americans to serve their communities and our country by working in neighborhood schools, as police officers and on environmental projects. In return, they will earn credit that can be used to pay for college.

Many of you expressed fear of violence in your schools and neighborhoods. It's very important to me that we pass the SAFE Schools initiative, which would help take guns and violence out of our schools. We're also making it harder for criminals to get their hands on guns. The "Brady Bill," which I signed last fall, will stop people with criminal records from buying guns. I am also working to put 100,000 more police officers on the streets.

I cannot make these changes by myself. I need your help. You can help preserve the environment by recycling. You can volunteer through schools, churches and community centers to serve food in soup kitchens for the homeless; you can tutor kids who are having trouble in school; or you can become a buddy to an underprivileged child. The most important thing you can do for our country is to work hard in the classroom and prepare yourselves for the time when your generation will be leading America.

Many of you asked about my life in the White House. It's a beautiful, comfortable home, and I enjoy living in a residence where so many important events in our nation's history have occurred. My job as President can be very difficult, but it's also exciting and challenging. The best part is knowing that I have an opportunity to make America better for young people like you.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

Winter Olympic Guide

Yikes!

Ski jumpers get this view of Lillehammer. The ramp is on the side of a mountain, not on top, so it doesn't block the town's view of the peaks.

Sledding THE EVENT

Hey! We just had an Olympics two years ago. Aren't they four years apart? Whazzup?

Both Winter and Summer Games used to be held in the same year—winter and summer of 1984, then 1988, and so on. But from now on, there'll be Olympics every two years, switching back and forth from winter to summer (Winter Games this year; Summer in 1996, Winter in 1998....).

The 17th Winter Games run from February 12 to 27 in Lillehammer, Norway. Here's the scoop on some top American and Canadian competitors.

Written by James Buckley Jr.

Olympic bobsleds race down steep, icy tracks with wicked curves that can flip the two- or four-man sleds in a heartbeat. Another sledding sport, luge, uses lightweight one-person sleds. Racers wearing skintight rubber outfits lie flat on their backs with their toes pointed forward. They steer by leaning with their feet and shoulders.

ATHLETE TO WATCH Brian Schimer *

Driving a bobsled is intense: no brakes, ropes to steer, and only the driver sees where he's going. Fun, huh? Brian's one of the best bobsled drivers in the world. Last winter, he guided the team that won the four-man World Cup. At Lillehammer, he'll use a new sled designed by NASCAR racer Geoff Bodine, a guy who knows about going fast.

THE EVENT Figure Skating

In the most popular of the Olympic events, figure skaters spin, jump, twirl and glide to music on a hockey-sized rink. Competition is held in singles, pairs and ice dancing. A new rule lets professionals compete with amateurs, so several former Olympic champions may be back this year.

ATHLETES TO WATCH

Isabelle Brasseur Lloyd Eisle

Pairs skaters Isabelle and Lloyd were surprise Bronze medalists in 1992. With two more years' experience under their skates, the couple hopes to do even better in Norway.

Michelle Kwan

ATHLETE TO WATCH

In the space of six minutes, Michelle can do seven triple jumps, leaping and spinning three times before she lands. Michelle, who's only 13 years old, began skating in a shopping mall rink when she was 5.

ATHLETE TO WATCH AJ Kitt ★★★★

Downhill specialists like AJ are kind of crazy. You'd have to be to strap on skis and zoom down a mountain faster than you'd drive a car, sometimes flying 200 feet through the air. AJ began skiing when he was just a kid, and he's become one of the world's top downhillers. Does he ever get scared? "Definitely not!" he says.

Olympians can compete in three kinds of skiing: Alpine, cross-country and ski jumping.

Alpine skiers race in four events: downhill, slalom, giant slalom and super giant slalom. The downhill is a straight run down a mountain, where skiers can go 70 miles per hour (gut check!). In the three slalom races, skiers cut back and forth between poles while speeding downhill.

Cross-country skiing is like running on skis, up to 22 miles.

And ski jumping is for daredevils only: Competitors slide down a steep ramp and see how far they can fly.

Kerrin Lee-Gartner ★ ATHLETE TO WATCH

Canada has some awesome mountains for alpine skiing, but not many Olympic medals to show for it—so far. Kerrin may add to Canada's medal count. She shocked the world's skiing superstars in 1992 by winning the downhill Gold. Fans from Vancouver to Prince Edward Island are hoping she can do it again.

U.S.
CANADA

THE EVENT Speed Skating

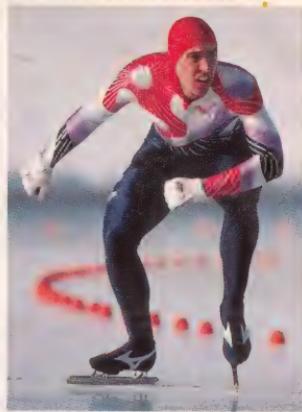

Wearing long, thin, sharp blades, skaters race in pairs against the clock around an icy oval. They reach speeds as high as 30 miles per hour in races ranging from 500 meters to 10,000 meters. For less wind resistance, competitors skate in a bent-over position for the whole race.

ATHLETE TO WATCH

Brian Smith *

Brian is a superstar waiting to happen. He's only 20, but he's already the world junior and U.S. all-around speed-skating champion. Look for Brian in the 3,000- and 5,000-meter races.

ATHLETE TO WATCH

Bonnie Blair *

Bonnie is the Carl Lewis, Michael Jordan and Barry Bonds of women's speed skating. She'll be going for her third Gold Medal in the 500-meter sprint—no one else has even done it twice! She's the world record holder in the 500 and the current world champion. In 1992, Bonnie won the Sullivan Award, which goes to America's best amateur athlete in any sport. She's so popular, a cheering section follows her to every Olympic Games: Fifty friends and relatives traveled with her to France in 1992.

ATHLETES TO WATCH

Canada's Olympic
Hockey Team

When the Blue Jays won the World Series again, Canada became the world champion of baseball, America's national pastime. In the Winter Olympics, Canada will try to become champion of its own national pastime—hockey. Canada won a Silver Medal two years ago, bringing its all-time Olympic hockey total to six Gold, three Silver and two Bronze medals. This year, their team will be led by Paul Lindros, younger brother of NHL superstar Eric.

The competition for Gold in Olympic ice hockey is like a short, intense race for the Stanley Cup. Teams from all over the world play one another until the field is narrowed to the three best teams—the Gold, Silver and Bronze medalists.

THE Wintergreen
Olympics

Lillehammer, Norway, is a little town of 22,000 people. To keep their forest neighborhood from being trampled by the Olympics, organizers of the Lillehammer Games tried to make them as environmentally safe as possible. Some people are calling these the "greenest" Olympics ever. Here's what's been done:

The "Hall of the Mountain King," which will be used for hockey, was built inside a mountain, so it wouldn't ruin the landscape.

Olympic builders who cut down trees they were not supposed to were fined $8,000 per tree.

Lights at the speed-skating oval were placed so they wouldn't shine into a bird sanctuary.

Bullets from the biathlon, a skiing/shooting event, will be picked up and recycled.

All the plates used to serve food to Olympic visitors will be edible. That's one way to get rid of litter...eat it!

weird dogs

So you think your dog's funny looking?
Check out these peculiar pooches.

DUMBO THE DOG

The papillon's name means "butterfly" in French. That's 'cause his ears stick out in the shape of butterfly wings. They're such cool-looking dogs that a lot of famous Renaissance artists painted them. French King Louis XIV loved his papillons so much he made sure they were included in almost all of his family portraits.

MAYBE HE LIKES GRAPE JUICE

The chow chow has a purple tongue! No one really knows why. Chow chows are sacred in China—one Chinese emperor kept 5,000! President Calvin Coolidge liked 'em, too; two chow chows, Blackberry and Tiny Tim, lived with him in the White House.

JUST CALL HIM BABY HERMAN

Most Mexican hairless dogs have no fur—except for a little patch on top of their heads. But one furry puppy, called a "Powder Puff," is born in almost every litter. This puppy's job is to keep the hairless puppies toasty until they are strong enough to move around and keep warm.

DON'T WORRY, HE'LL GROW INTO IT

As a puppy, a shar-pei looks like he's wearing his dad's overcoat. By the time he's grown, most of the wrinkles and folds will be gone. This feisty dude used to be known as the Chinese Fighting Dog. He developed the loose skin so if another dog grabs him, he can easily twist out of his grasp.

MAYBE MOUSSE WOULD HELP

The affenpinscher (German for "monkey terrier") has bushy eyebrows that hang down over his eyes, weird tufts of hair that stick out all over his face and a droopy moustache. This German rat-catcher is called a monkey dog because he's small, black, and has a funny expression on his face.

BAD HAIR DAY

The puli's fur becomes tangled into long, ropelike cords. This thick coat protects the puli from varmint bites and prickers and insulates him from heat and cold. This Hungarian pooch is such a great sheep herder, herdsmen will spend a whole year's wages to buy one.

Hey.

It's cold.
It's

snowing and the wind's blowing.
And MC²'s lost her mind. She's drinking ice water!

"I'm not drinking it—I'm conducting an experiment," she says. "When you drop an ice cube in a glass of water, a tiny bit of ice sticks out of the water. See?"

She pushes the glass under my nose and keeps going: "That's just like an iceberg—only about 10 to 15 percent of an iceberg shows above water. That's what makes them so dangerous."

"Uh, cool, MC." What else could I say?

Yow! She just threw an ice cube at me! "Cool it, MC!"

I better answer your questions before she totally loses it. To read

How do hurricanes get their names?

Laura Keshishian, 11
Hackensack, New Jersey

The National Hurricane Center near Miami uses six alphabetical lists of names—one list a year in a six-year cycle. The first hurricane of the year gets an "A" name, like "Allen." The second hurricane gets a "B" name, like "Bonnie." They don't use names beginning with Q, U, X, Y or Z because hardly any names start with these letters.

(Sorry, no Hurricane Zack!)

Until 1979, all hurricanes were given girls' names. Now they trade off: one boy, one girl—so no one's left out.

Why don't cats like having their bellies rubbed?

Brad Chalker, 9 Romulus, New York

Last month I told you that dogs love to have their bellies scratched. But if you try to scratch your cat's belly, he'll probably scratch you! A cat's belly is where his enemies try to injure him, so your cat will freak out if you try to touch him there.

A cat will often roll onto his back and expose his belly as a way of saying, "I totally trust you!" But that still doesn't mean he wants you to rub his belly. Don't take it personally—just scratch him behind the ears instead.

OK, MC² has cooled down. Now we're going to have some hot cocoa. 'Til next month, play hard and think deep!

ICE HUNTERS

By the time the ship's watch saw the towering iceberg, it was too late. In fewer than three hours the "unsinkable" Titanic lay on the ocean floor, its bow crumpled by ice. The iceberg drifted south; the only sign of collision was a red streak of the ship's paint on its side.

The 500-mile-wide Grand Banks, where the Titanic went down, is one of the most dangerous ocean areas in the world. Ships must navigate through 10,000 to 15,000 icebergs, thick fog and stormy waters. But it's the shortest North Atlantic route from America to Europe, so thousands of ships pass through each year.

A large, jagged iceberg dominates the center of the image. It has several sharp peaks and deep, dark shadows. In the foreground, a smaller, more rounded iceberg is partially submerged in the dark blue water. A small, bright green patch, described as a "swimming pool," is visible on the surface of the larger iceberg.

Chilly dip! This 1,000-foot-long iceberg has a "swimming" pool in the middle.

"Next to an iceberg, a 600-foot-long ship looks like a toy boat in a bathtub."

To protect those ships, the International Ice Patrol was formed in 1914, two years after the Titanic sank. The Ice Patrol has one mission: to keep ships and icebergs far away from each other. Senior Ice Observer Robin Klarmann takes that pledge seriously.

Robin, 28, is part of a 16-member crew that flies out of Newfoundland, Canada, every other week during iceberg season (spring and summer) to spot icebergs in the Grand Banks.

For seven hours a day during a week-long patrol, Robin straps on her headphones and sits in the back of a radar-equipped Hercules C-130 airplane. Her job is to relay messages from the radar operators as they report on any icebergs in the area. Other patrol members man the windows, looking for ice.

"I talk with the plane's radar operators and try to figure out if the blips they're detecting are icebergs. I also tell the radar operators when the patrol members have sighted an iceberg," Robin says. "Then we confirm its position on radar."

Robin Klarmann

Satellite-tracked buoys record the iceberg's speed, direction and how fast it's melting. Robin sends this information via computer to Ice Patrol headquarters in Connecticut. Ships then receive a bulletin about what areas to avoid.

Grand Banks icebergs can be longer than a city block and taller than a three-story building. And that's only what you can see—85 to 90 percent of an iceberg is underwater.

"Sometimes you'll see a 600-foot-long ship, and it looks like a toy boat next to this huge thing of ice," Robin says. Once she saw an iceberg that was more than 1,000 feet long, with a pool of water in the middle as big as a swimming pool!

The Ice Patrol once tried to get rid of icebergs by blowing them up, but Robin says, "Getting close enough to bomb an iceberg is very dangerous. Also, the amount of explosives you'd need would be very expensive. Then once you blew the iceberg up, instead of having one big iceberg you'd have lots of small bergs, so we'd actually create more of a hazard. The best thing to do is to just let it drift and melt by itself."

Last year, the Patrol tracked 1,700 icebergs. Does it work? You bet. Since the Ice Patrol began, not one life or ship has been lost in the Grand Banks. Robin wants to keep it that way.

—Samantha Bonar

ICE TALK

ICEPICKS: what the radar operators call the ice observers.

TWEAKS: what the ice observers call the radar operators, because they're always tweaking with the equipment.

DREADNOUGHTS: the million-ton biggest icebergs.

GROWLERS: the hundred-ton smallest icebergs.

THE FISH POLICE: Canadian Department of Oceans and Fisheries plane.

HERC: Hercules C-130, the planes used by the Ice Patrol.

REC-DET: a short way to say "reconnaissance detachment"—the Ice Patrol plane and its crew.

The White House kitchen has handled pretty weird food requests from presidents:

- Lyndon Johnson often asked for deer sausage, and he insisted his salad be chopped fine enough to eat with a spoon.
- Dwight Eisenhower grilled steaks on the White House roof.
- Ronald Reagan ate goofy desserts, like little snowmen made out of coconut ice cream.
- When Andrew Jackson received a 1,400-pound cheese as a gift, he invited the public to sample it. People stormed the White House, demolishing the cheese and mashing it into the carpet.

Just in case a few thousand friends drop by for dinner, there are 13,092 knives, forks and spoons in the White House.

White House

In 1825, visiting French General Marquis de Lafayette kept his pet alligator in the East Room.

Illustration: Wayne Vincent

The White House got electricity (and a flagpole on the roof) in 1889, when Benjamin Harrison was President.

One man works full-time washing the house's 150 windows. He also spends two days cleaning each of the East Room's three chandeliers, sitting on a scaffold to wash and polish each piece of glass individually.

worm

Imagine stepping out your back door and seeing 5 million worms creeping and crawling around your yard. That's the sight that greets Billy Johnson of Hornsby, Tennessee, every morning.

Johnson is a worm rancher. He raises "red wigglers," which he sells to fishing fanatics around the country.

But he's not just some guy with dirt and a shovel. He raises more than 30 million worms each year. His workers pack them up, about 5,000 worms to a box, and send them to bait shops—by regular U.S. mail! (They'll last several days without food or water.)

On a typical day, Johnson heads out around 6 a.m. (the early bird does get the worm) to visit his worm "beds"—wooden troughs that are a foot deep, 3 feet wide and up to 50 feet long. Their "bedding" is made from the unusable parts of cotton plants.

Then he feeds and waters his worms. Their favorite meal is ground grain, "the same thing you'd feed a chicken," he says.

At night, Johnson turns on powerful outdoor lights because worms don't like light, so they hide in their beds instead of escaping. Once, Johnson says, a storm knocked out the lights. "When I got here, worms were crawling everywhere," he says. "I had to take a broom and sweep 'em back in."

Birds are Johnson's biggest enemy, especially in the winter, when migrating robins pass through Tennessee. "You have to go out and shoo them away, otherwise they sit there and eat 'til they pop," the worm rancher says with a laugh. "I've had 'em get so fat they couldn't hardly fly."

BUGS BUNNY: RABBIT RAMPAGE

One Player

Super NES

Eh, what's up, doc? A new video game starring that wacky wabbit, that's what. Turns out Bugs' animator is a lunatic out to destroy Bugs. The animator keeps drawing new enemies and obstacles. But Bugs fights back, using clever tricks like throwing pies. Lots of action and great cartoon-like sounds make this just like the TV show!

Tip: Press the Pie-Throwing button and the Kick button at the same time to perform a spinning attack.

THE SIMPSONS: BART VS. THE BEANSTALK

One Player

Game Boy

It's the classic fairy tale told Bart-style. But when Bart tries to climb the giant beanstalk, he keeps falling off. Your mission: Find the right part of the beanstalk to climb. Sounds easy, but it's a mighty big beanstalk!

Tip: Avoid flying bees, and use your sling shot to shoot other types of bugs.

NHL STANLEY CUP

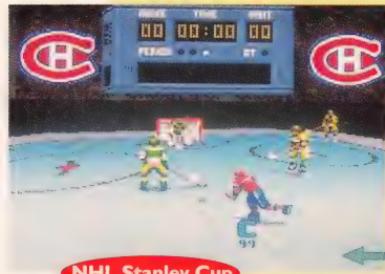

One or Two Players

Super NES

Go for the Stanley Cup! Choose your favorite team from all 26 NHL teams. Play a single exhibition game, a full season or a best of seven series. You can shoot, pass and check opponents, but avoid Icing, Offsides and Line Change penalties.

Tip: Watch for referees before you illegally check an opposing player. You can fake a slap shot by tapping the B button after you press the Y button.
